- Client Centered Psychotherapy (Carolyn Schneider)
 Client centered therapy and the person-centered approach are evolving systems of therapy and human relations based on a fundamental belief in an individual's internal capacity for change and respect for that individual's authority and right to self-regulation. This consultation group will focus on the application of core concepts of client-centered therapy, and the meaning and implications of working from a non-directive approach. The group will also explore the causes of personality change, the importance of empathy and presence to successful therapy outcomes, and management of boundary and diagnostic concerns.
